NORWAY.

Norwegian peasant is a tree man on the scanty bit of ground which he has inherited from his fathers, and he has all the virtues of a free man-an open character a mind clear of every falsehood, a hospitable heart for the stranger. His religious feelings are deep and sincere and the bible is to be found in every hut. His courage and patriotism are abundantly proved by history.

THE MAMALUKE

Ali, from a common soldier had some to be ruler over Egypt. Like every man who ever rose to power, envy hated him and treason plotted his overthrow. The Mamalukes were his mortal foes, and he, with no such forgiving spirit as led Rienzi to spare the Barons when he could have raised fallen Rome and put her on the road to greatness, planned their death at a stroke. Fill ing his towers with trusty soldiers he invited the Mamilukes to parade within the walls of the citadel. Unsuspectedly they marched to their down-a splendid band of gaily-decorated warriors, The backbone of spring is whose very steeds pranced with pride to be the bearers of such cavaliers.
